The Junior class of the Normal gave a Halloween party last Friday evening. The guests were received in ghostly silence by a committee of Ghosts and Witches. Several fortune tellers were present who disclosed the past and future of the guests by consulting the hands and the tarot cards. Cake, candy and punch were served and the evening was passed very pleasantly.

Everybody knows that "Bush" Smith is a stirring business man, always on the lookout for a good trade. This was evident by the manner in which he started a trade with a man on the train the other day. He stepped up to the man slapped him on the shoulder and said, "Hello Fred, don't you want to buy some hogs?" The man said, "Well, I guess so, what do you ask?" Mr. Smith says "eight cents," and the man wanted to know how many he had, "five," Smith said. The man said that was not enough he wanted ten and Smith said he knew where he could get them and so an agreement was made for Smith to deliver them such a day. When they get to Johnson Smith gets off and some one asks him who that man was he was trading with. "Why it was Fred Leland." "No" the man replied "it was a runner from Boston." Smith thoughtfully eyed the departing train and said "Well I should like to know where I am to deliver them darned hogs."
